ANSWER

FAQ

Q1: Define whom we can receive / not receive a gift from?

Answer: Based on Section 5.5.2 of our Code, you may receive gifts from clients, suppliers, or business partners provided they are:

- Of nominal value (under USD $100)
- Not intended to influence your judgment or decisions
- Consistent with normal business practices
- Not in cash form

You should NOT receive gifts from:

- Anyone seeking to improperly influence your business decisions
- Competitors & Suppliers (unless token promotional items)
- Anyone where acceptance might create a conflict of interest

FAQ

Q2: When must gift items received be declared?

Answer: According to Section 5.5.4, all monetary and non-monetary gifts above the nominal value of USD $100 must be declared to your immediate Line Supervisor/Manager or HR Department. This declaration should be made promptly upon receiving the gift.

Make sure your declaration is in writing to your immediate supervisor or Human Resources.

FAQ

Q3: If a gift item is above $100, is this gift taken away or returned to the giver?

Answer: While the Code requires declaration of gifts above $100, the specific action (return, surrender, or approval to keep) should be determined by your immediate supervisor or HR Department after declaration, in relation to point 1 above.

FAQ

Q4: What happens if I receive a gift that is above USD $100?

Answer: You must:

1. Immediately declare it to your Line Supervisor/Manager or HR Department
2. Do not use or benefit from the gift until guidance is provided
3. Follow the decision made by your supervisor regarding whether to retain, donate, or return the gift
4. Document the incident in writing as part of your declaration

FAQ

Q5: If a gift received is below $100, what is an employee required to do?

Answer: For gifts below $100:

- No formal declaration is required, but use good judgment
- Ensure it doesn't influence your business decisions
- Avoid accepting frequent small gifts from the same source, as cumulative value matters
- Consult your supervisor if you're unsure about appropriateness
- Remember: Even small gifts should not compromise your objectivity

FAQ

Q6: If one colleague gives another colleague a gift, does this fall under the policy?

Answer: Personal gifts between colleagues, do not fall under this policy provided they:

- Are of personal nature (not business-related)
- Don't create workplace favoritism or conflicts
- Don't affect professional decision-making

FAQ

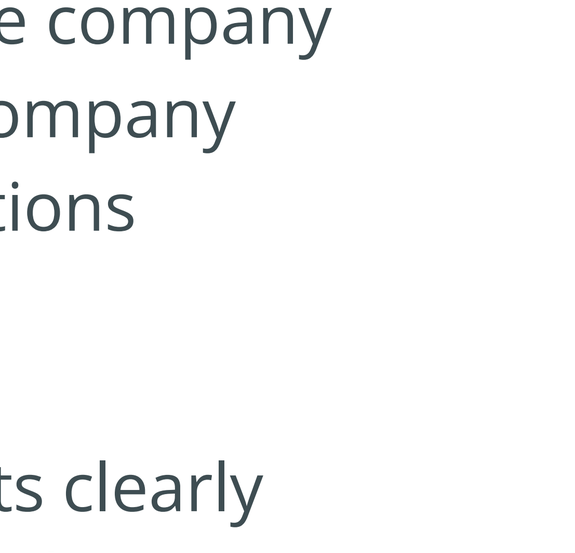

Q7: Please describe "corporate external communications", as the same needs to be coordinated through the Vice Chairman/Chief Executive Officer's office.

Answer: "Corporate external communications" as referenced in Section 9 includes, but not limited to:

Requires CEO Office Coordination:

- Media interviews or press statements
- Official company announcements or policy statements
- Social media posts representing the company officially
- Industry conference presentations on behalf of the company
- Written articles or publications attributed to the company
- Responses to public inquiries about company positions
- Marketing materials and advertising content

Personal communications (like individual LinkedIn posts clearly marked as personal opinions) typically don't require coordination, but should not contradict company positions or share confidential information

FAQ

Q8: In the office, we discuss a lot of politics. Does this policy stop us from discussing any kind of politics e.g. world politics, country politics etc.?

Answer: According to Section 8, the policy addresses political activities in two ways:

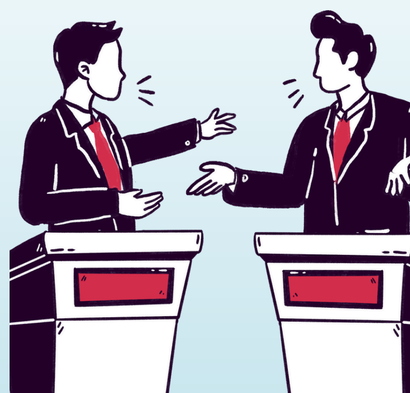

What's Prohibited:

- Representing the company in political matters
- Discussing political ideologies during working hours that may be viewed as offensive, tribal, racial or demeaning to listeners

What's Generally Acceptable:

- Respectful, brief discussions about current events during breaks
- Personal political opinions expressed respectfully without demeaning others
- Educational discussions about global or local political affairs that don't become heated debates

Best Practice: Keep political discussions minimal, respectful, and avoid topics that could create workplace tension or make colleagues uncomfortable.

FAQ

Q9: What happens if a supervisor of mine treats me without respect in the workplace?

Answer: Section 5.1 clearly states that the company does not tolerate unfair treatment or harassment. If your supervisor treats you disrespectfully:

Immediate Actions:

1. Document the incidents (dates, witnesses, specific behaviors)
2. Report to HR Department or Divisional Director
3. Use the confidential reporting channels mentioned in Section 12 that will be released in due course

Please note:

- Investigation will be conducted promptly and confidentially
- Disciplinary action may be taken against the supervisor if violations are found to be true
- You are protected from retaliation under Section 12
- Support and corrective measures will be implemented

Remember: All leaders are primarily responsible for creating an atmosphere free of discrimination and harassment.

FAQ

Q10: Can disciplinary action be taken against a colleague who goes against the Code of Conduct & Ethics?

Answer: Yes, absolutely. According to Sections 11 and 12:
Disciplinary Actions May Include:

- Verbal or written warnings
- Suspension from work that may lead to Termination of employment (for serious violations)

FAQ

Q11: What should I do if I'm unsure whether something violates the Code?

Answer: When in doubt:

- Consult your immediate Line Supervisor/Manager
- Contact HR Department for guidance
- Reach out to Legal and Compliance Department
- Use the confidential reporting hotline (when launched)
- Remember: It's better to ask than to inadvertently violate the Code
